Though it does not strike the right note, I must begin my term as editor of the ACLA Newsletter with an apology. A combination of problems arising out of the crisis in graduate education (even Stony Brook) and family illness has kept me from sending out this issue until now. I can only hope to be more expeditious in the future but what that future holds for graduate studies is indeed an open question. In any event, by popular demand, this issue lists the names and addresses of the members of the Association; to the best of my knowledge, no one has been overlooked; if, however, a member has not been listed, I apologize in advance and assure him or her that the name will be listed in the next issue. Since the list is intended for reference, the only other matters in this issue are the announcements below. Subsequent issues will be devoted, as before, to problems of the profession, and I welcome your contributions.

There will be an open meeting of the American Comparative Literature Association at the December meeting of the Modern Language Association in New York on Wednesday evening, December 27, from 8:00-9:30 p.m. at the New York Hilton, Room Gramercy B. The meeting will include a symposium on the future of Comparative Literature in American universities as it looks to new members of the profession. It will be followed by a reception for members of the Association in Gramercy A from 9:30-11:00 p.m.

Professor Leland H. Chambers would like to collect information concerning lectures, symposia, and special events connected with Comparative Literature programs during the period since 1967. A comprehensive national list of such non-curricular contributions to Comparative Literature programs would be both impressive and suggestive. In order to keep the list up to date, Professor Chambers would like to be on everyone's mailing list to receive notices of all such future events. Please send to Professor Leland H. Chambers, Department of English, University of Denver, Denver, Colorado 80210.
